

THERESA CLOWES | Artist Statement

Theresa Clowes's new body of work is a visual feast of color, movement, and texture. Created in collaboration with the Rocky Mountain Land Library, this work explores how historical and cultural data influence our relationship with water. Through each landscape oil painting, Clowes distills information about the world's predicament of having too much and not enough water simultaneously while addressing global warming, our environmental impact, and the joy of thinking about possibilities.

Thank you to Jeff Lee and Ann Marie Martin for their support and to the Rocky Mountain Land Library for their excellent books.
